

Cartoon Network and Pilot Pen Unite to Erase Bullying

Two-year collaboration builds on Cartoon Network's existing partnership with 826 National to "Stop Bullying and Speak Up"

Cartoon Network and Pilot Corporation of America (Pilot Pen) are speaking up against bullying through a two-year partnership that provides students with the platform and creative resources to share their individual stories of empathy and inclusion. This collaboration adds to Cartoon Network's award-winning "Stop Bullying: Speak Up" pro-social initiative with 826 National, which encourages young people to speak up and stop bullying before it starts. The newly minted alliance will help amplify Pilot Pen's ongoing "Erase Bullying For Good" campaign with its line of FriXion Erasable Gel Ink Pens.

Beginning this month, Cartoon Network and Pilot Pen will distribute 500 bookmaking kits to classrooms and educators nationwide. The bookmaking kits include lessons developed by 826 National, based on the organization's internationally celebrated approach to teaching writing, to inspire student stories of compassion and understanding. The lessons also integrate beloved Cartoon Network characters and FriXion Clicker Erasable Gel Ink Pens, among other social-emotional learning writing tools, to support educators as they raise awareness of bullying and inspire dialogue among students.

The bookmaking kits will also introduce a new writing challenge, soliciting stories written by students about how kindness and understanding have helped stop bullying before it started. Cartoon Network will select one student's story, and bring the narrative to life from sketched storyboard to stylized animation using Pilot Pen's FriXion Clicker Erasable Gel Ink Pens. The 30-second animated vignette will air across Cartoon Network's television, digital and social properties to help elevate student voices as kids head back to school in August and September.

"At Pilot, we believe in the power of the written word to inspire and empower people of all ages to express themselves fearlessly, even in the face of bullying," said Ariann Langsam, vice president of consumer marketing, Pilot Corporation of America. "We're excited to partner with Cartoon Network to expand our 'Erase Bullying for Good' campaign and be able to share this message of positivity with young people in their own words.

"Pilot Pen, a company with an ongoing commitment to erase bullying and encourage students to excel, is a perfect partner for this project. We look forward to sparking creativity and dialogue that brings stories of empowerment to the center of this conversation," said Jennifer Cohen, senior vice president of content partnerships, Ignite, WarnerMedia Ad Sales.

"This new collaboration with Pilot Pen is a great complement to Cartoon Network's Stop Bullying: Speak Up initiative and specifically our partnership with 826 National, which is all about elevating kids voices on kindness, caring and empathy," said Jill King, senior vice president, marketing and partnerships, Cartoon Network, Adult Swim and Boomerang.

Over the course of the two-year partnership, Cartoon Network and Pilot Pen will expand the reach of their joint initiative to erase bullying and encourage kids to speak up safely and effectively through various multimedia extensions, including "Stop Bullying: Speak Up" co-branded packages of Pilot's FriXion Erasable Pens. The second annual writing challenge will resume in 2020 to continue to empower kids to tell their stories.
