STEP TWO: What Would You Do? Consider how a positive gamer would handle these scenarios:

- 1. You are playing a competitive game online as a team with two friends. You are all in separate places, but chatting while playing. Player 1 makes a mistake that hurts your team. Player 2 gets angry at Player 1 and writes "You are trash, get out of the game!" You are Player 3. What do you do?

TIP: Remember what you saw in the Cartoon Network PSA. You have the power to keep your friends calm and keep gaming positive. Even if you aren't directly involved in the conflict, how can you help?

- 2. You are playing an online game with three friends in your living room. One friend has never played before. Everyone wants to include him. How can you and your friends help your friend join and feel part of the group?

TIP: What would you do if something like this happened on the playground or in your classroom? Can you use similar strategies in an online space?

- 3. One evening you log into a multiplayer, sandbox game to find that the house you have built has been destroyed. You know who did it, and this has happened before. You have tried in the past to talk to this person directly, but it doesn't seem to be working. What do you do?

TIP: Remember that games have ways to keep kids and their work safe. Who could you reach out to for help?
